Newport's bachelors of hosts will be enlarged by two of the most popular members of the diplomatic corps, A. Lyssakovskiy, first Russian secretary, and E. Yonine, second Russian secretary, who are now in Newport looking for a cottage for the summer. They will return to Washington on Sunday. ## For The Times' Children Just Before It's Bedtime

DRUSILLA IS PHOTOGRAPHED.

"BOBBY Jones," said Drusilla one night, "I had my picture taken today."

"Did you get it again?" asked Bobby.

"How could I get it 'again,'" said Drusilla, "when this is the first time I ever had my picture taken."

"Didn't your little mother try to get it back?" asked Bobby, still in the dark as to what having a picture taken really meant.

"Bobby Jones, I do not believe you know what I mean by having my picture taken," said Drusilla. "You ask so many silly questions."

"It means seeing yourself in a card. Mine is to be on a postcard and my little mother is there, too. The cards are to be sent to some of her little friends and one is to be sent across the water, too."

"I do not see how you can see yourself on a card," said Bobby. "I know you can see yourself in a mirror because you told me about that. How do you look on a card, Drusilla?"

"I only had my picture taken this morning. I will tell you about it."

My little mother was wheeling me in my carriage in front of the house. I had on my new hat and coat and I expect I looked rather swell because several people stopped to look at me and ask my little mother 'how Drusilla was this morning.'

"By and by a young lady came along with a queer-looking black box in her hand. 'Oh, you dear,' she said, when she saw us. I suppose she meant me, although she did not say so, and of course she did not know my name then."

"I must have your picture. Will you stand by the gate with the dolly in your arms?"

"Of course she will," said that nurse who was with us, and she pulled me out of the carriage by my arm.

My little mother took me away from her. 'You hurt my Drusilla,' she said. 'You would not want me to pull your arm like that.'

"You darling girl," said the young lady again. She seemed to take a great fancy to me. 'You are a very lucky dolly to have such a nice little mother, and you must look very pleasant so I can get a good picture of you.'

Then she asked us to stand in a place where the light was bright and she pointed the queer-looking black box right at us.

I was rather nervous for a minute, but something clicked and she said it was all over, and it did not hurt a bit.

"Where was the picture all this time?" asked Bobby.

"You ask more questions, Bobby Jones," said Drusilla. "I told you I had not seen the picture. You cannot have it taken and see it all the same day."

"After the young lady said it was all over she asked my little mother to stand on the steps and let her take another picture, and that nurse said: 'Let me hold Drusilla, please, and you have one taken all alone.'

"But my little mother would not do

She pointed the queer-looking box at us.

that. 'I will have it taken if I can have Drusilla,' said my little mother. 'She might think I did not love her if I had it taken alone.'

"The young lady kissed her and laughed. 'You put Drusilla on the steps and I will take her picture alone, and then she will not mind if you do the same,' she said."

"So my little mother sat me on the step and put my hands in my lap; then she opened my coat so that the face on my dress would show, and the young lady pointed the queer-looking box at me again, and click it went again, and she said: 'It's all over. Drusilla, your picture is taken just like a real little girl's.'

Just then my little mother's mother came out of the house and the young lady and she talked, and when the young lady went away she told my little mother she would send her the pictures and the negative, whatever that is."

"Don't you know what it is?" asked Bobby. "I thought you knew everything."

"Bobby Jones, no one in the world knows everything," replied Drusilla. "I expect to know some day what that word means and then I will explain it to you. What I am interested in now is how my picture will look, for my little mother's father said if they were good he would have them put on postcards and my little mother would send them to friends, and that there were very few if any dolls who have had their picture taken and put on a postcard. At least that if what my little mother's father said."

He said, too, that I would become famous if I kept on."

"Keep on what?" asked Bobby. "Oh, Bobby Jones, I never knew any one to ask so many questions!" said Drusilla. "I expect he meant if I kept on being photographed and having adventures."

"Photographed?" repeated Bobby. "Were you photographed, too?"

"Oh! you silly, having your picture taken means being photographed," replied Drusilla. "You see how stupid you are, Bobby. You should ask so many questions. You should listen and not just play your 'ignorance' by asking questions."

"If you want my picture, Bobby, I am sure you can have one, or if you hear of any one who wants one tell them all they need do is to ask and I will send it to them through the mail. I do hope my hat was on straight."

her daughter, Mrs. Richard J. Lane, of Boston, Mass.

Julia Murdock Asserts School Boy Learned Geography From "Movies"

Convinced Doubting Father Belasoo Pictures Taught Him Balkan History.

"DADDY, I learned more geography and history of those Balkan states from the moving map up at the Belasoo than I did in a whole term at school," declared a fourteen-year-old Washington boy to his father the other evening. The paternal relative, being more or less pessimistic on the question of pictorial education, was inclined at first to regard this statement as a shrewd plea for theatergoing, but on putting the boy through an impromptu examination, was surprised to find that he actually knew more of the history of the Balkan states and of Turkey in Europe than did his inquirer.

About all the father could recall of the perpetual feud between Greece and Turkey prior to the recent war, was the fact that Maria Theresa once saw the Turks at the walls of Vienna, and that trouble was perennially brewing in the Balkans, this last impression having been derived from Kipling's story, "The Light That Failed."

"You see, Dad," explained the youngster, "they have a big colored map, like those in the school books, showing all the Balkan states in different colors, and change as the different nations conquer these countries."

"The lecturer tells us how the Turks invaded Europe in 1298, which seems a long way off and doesn't interest you much, until you see a red wave—that's the color of the Ottoman possessions—roll across the Bosphorus and almost persecution or catarrh. The following is a simple remedy for excessive perspiration: Perborate of soda, 1 dr., salicylic acid, 20 gr., powdered boracic acid, 2 oz. Mix the powders together and dust about a teaspoonful into the shoes each morning."

T. J.: The hollows under your eyes and heavy cheeks indicate a run-down condition of the system. If you do not care to go to a physician for a tonic, following a few simple rules of health will often build a person up. Eat plenty of nourishing food three times a day. Do not eat between meals and it is best to avoid all pastry and alcoholic drinks. Try to retire each night by 10 o'clock, and if you can not sleep well rising at 6 or earlier is a good plan. Iron, quinine and strychnine is an excellent spring tonic and may be bought at any drug store. The drug list will tell you whether it is safe to take the preparation and how to regulate the dose.

I. T. W.: It is impossible to find out any definite information on this subject, as no official record has ever been kept and the word of persons differs. Mr. Roosevelt left the city immediately following the inauguration of President Taft.

Kindly tell me a safe cure for perspiring and swelling feet. During the hot weather my feet swell and perspire with the least walking. Can you suggest a remedy for this? A. Z. E.

Tired, swollen and perspiring feet are often the result of tight shoes. In the summer the feet almost always swell a little and special care should be taken not to wear tight shoes. Change the stockings daily, and the shoes twice a day if it is possible. If the stockings are changed daily and aired one pair may be worn three times without washing, except in cases of extreme Moving Map Shows Advance and Repulse of the Turk Across the Bosphorus.

Right in the middle of the map is a little green spot—that's Montenegro. You know—and every now and then there comes a little wave of the Turkish color right up to 'The Black Mountain,' but those brave mountaineers push it back every time. Then up comes a great big red wave and you think for a minute that the little green spot is bound to be swallowed up; but the red wave just goes on and on, a wave striking a rock, and rolls back again. And you ought to hear the people applaud that little green spot when, after keeping itself above the red for hundreds of years in history, just during the recent war it begins to spread out and cover some of the old Turkish territory. That's some geography lesson!"

Shows How Panama Canal Will Save Time.

The effect on this map is secured by "trick" photography, and the result is at once entertaining and instructive. It is thrown upon the screen a map of the North and South American continents about as they might look to an observer some hundreds of miles up in the sky.

As the spectator looks he sees two tiny steamers start from New York, both bound for San Francisco, one via the canal and one via Cape Horn. The steamer going by way of the canal wins the race with many thousands of miles to spare. The process is repeated with steamers routed New York to Valparaiso, New York to Yokohama, etc., the canal routed steamers always having an immense advantage.

This animated map was prepared in England under the direction of expert hydrographers, and the speed of the ship shown is regulated, not only by the actual mileage traveled, but by a careful consideration of the drift of currents and prevalence of the head winds.
